Kendall Square Initiative

The Kendall Square Initiative continues that work with the transformation of six former parking lots into buildings with offices, laboratories, housing, and retail.

Designing the Urban Soundscape

We host design theses on a wide range of topics which relate to explorations into strategies for resilience material, environmental, socio-economic and cultural, the contemporary role of civic institutions, and the impact of architecture and urbanism on social equity. The Board's agenda that evening has other items relevant to the study area: beginning with the public hearing for the Forest City rezoning petition at 7:20 PM and ending with an update from MIT on their Kendall Square plans. It is predominantly residential but also includes parts of the Harvard University campus, Cambridge and Youville Hospitals, and the Cambridge Rindge and Latin School.

East Campus Urban Design Study

These place a strong emphasis on the design content of the projects in the first term, and work to build the supporting research framework in the second. It is also a unique approach to long-term community planning. The New York Soundmap at allows the public to upload their own sounds that simultaneously get marked on an online map.

Department of Architecture

This term means different things to different people.

For Applicants

Soundscape studies represent an emerging and exciting research field that unifies the independent areas related to sound and environment.

Town Planning

Although soundscape studies so far have been focused on noise pollution, many scientists and planners today argue for the need to make environmental acoustics a study program using innovative design to bring out the positive aspects of sound in the urban environment. Based on this body of work, MIT issued Requests for Proposals and in with several design teams to create building concepts for the east campus gateway area.
