§ 9

Note, however, that a distribution participant that is an affiliate of the issuer may not rely on the actively-traded securities exception of Rule 101. Rule 104 governs stabilization transactions and certain post-offering activities by the underwriters, and Rule 105 governs short selling in anticipation of a public offering. A: Regulation M generally does not apply to purchases of the target security by an acquiror or target during a merger or exchange offer.

Do you have sales tax nexus in Washington? These three requirements are similar to the requirements under the current version of Article 9, but there are several differences that may affect how security agreements are designed and executed. A: The day most comparable to the day of mailing the proxy solicitation materials is the day the target security holders are first asked to commit to the transaction, which would be the day the acquiror sends a definitive acquisition agreement to the target security holders for their execution.

The restricted period for B's distribution begins when it sends its proxy solicitation and continues through the vote on A's merger proposal. Such excused withdrawals are not applicable to actively-traded securities because these securities are not subject to a restricted period under Rule 101. In the staff's view, however, B's restricted period need not be co-extensive with B's distribution period.

Is there an annual filing requirement with the Securities Division for an offering exempt under federal Rule 506? A license is required under the Mortgage Broker Practices Act if you make residential mortgage loans or assist a person in obtaining a residential mortgage loan. You will be issued an exemption acknowledgment letter unless the Division issues an order disallowing the exemption. If the valuation period extends after the vote, how does this affect the restricted period? Any market transactions during the restricted period resulting from the original solicitation would be deemed solicited.
