Ben Ross Schneider looks behind this façade to explain how the Brazilian bureaucracy contributes to industrialization by analyzing career patterns and appointments which structure incentives and power more than formal organizations or institutions. The Brazilian auto industry has been a symbol of industrialization not only in that country but in Latin America in general.

It redefines the study of industrialization in the automotive sector and makes a new contribution to development theory. It tells how autoparts suppliers, working with state officials, were instrumental in shaping legislation, policies, and industrial practices from the 1950s to the present and how this alliance resulted in protectionist policies and legislation that helped form cooperative relationships between assembly operations and suppliers. Politics and personalism, of the right sort, Schneider argues, can in fact enhance policy effectiveness and state capacity.
