The Athapaskans frequently sharpen their end scrapers during this activity with hides stretched on a frame and the tool is replaced when it becomes too short after successive resharpening episodes Beyries 2008, Diaporama Modélisations. In: Handbook of North American Indians, Volume 15: Northeast. One of these is a resharpening notch, bearing continuous traces on the part that corresponds to the centre of the front, whereas the area corresponding to the lateral edge of the front does not bear any.
