Security and Defence and enlargement of the European Union (2)

In the 1990s, NATO began a course of enlargement and transformation to remain relevant in Europe's post-Cold War security environment. Albania and Croatia were invited to join NATO at the that April, though Slovenia threatened to hold up Croatian membership over in the.

NATO Enlargement: Balancing Economic and Military Objectives.

None of this is new to NATO. This brought another change in direction of Ukraine's association with Europe and by extension NATO. On the other hand, President Bush has been careful not to break the common European- North American approach in the Balkans, while Canada, though stretched to the utmost in terms of military resources after deep military cut- backs, has maintained a large contingent in the stabilization force in Bosnia.

NATO warned not to underestimate Russia's military ambitions

The United States has security interests on the European continent. At the same time, Russia- NATO relations have also progressed.

In fact, President Clinton received a clamorous welcome when he traveled to Romania two days after the Madrid summit. Today, some members criticize Turkey for its intermittent suppression of the Kurds, or Greece for discrimination against Moslems. One or two other party combinations are also possible for building a coalition.

Hungary receives NATO support to appoint new KFOR commander

The NATO members' position has always been the same: the Alliance's decision cannot be subject to a non-member's veto. Itzkowitz Shiffrin and Professor of University of California, Berkeley, both argue that an informal agreement existed. One of the great challenges of this time is to find ways of preserving and strengthening the relatively peaceful security environment that we now enjoy in Europe after the end of the Cold War.

These officials do not wish to deny such an opportunity to qualified candidate states. When the domestic debate is engaged, it will likely lead to a sharper delineation of U.

NATO Enlargement: Balancing Economic and Military Objectives.

The debate over enlargement is taking place within the context of evolving NATO-Russian relations. Washington's envoy, James Pardew, has worked with the European Union envoy François Léotard to bring together the parties to sign a framework for constitutional change and the disarmament of the National Liberation Army NLA or UCK of the guerilla Albanians. With the European Community focused on the economic recovery of new member countries and NATO focused on dual economic-military systems and infrastructure, new member countries can best stabilize their military while retaining economic and political gains this approach is similar to that of Germany and Japan after WWII.
