Communications Act Revisions: Selected Issues for Consideration

Municipal Wi-Fi also provides the opportunity to improve social services and Internet access in disadvantaged communities that often are not served by fiber optic networks. The 1996 act removed the numeric cap on the number of stations a broadcast network could own, replacing it with language that an individual, company, or corporation could own broadcast television stations that reached up to 35% of households in the United States UHF stations counted half their actual reach for this limitation calculation. Our first task is to define the relevant product market.

AT&T v. FTC Decision and Media Ownership Rules Review

Armstrong argued the cause for the Federal Communications Commission, petitioner in No.

Newspaper/Broadcast Cross

Many could now choose among both broadcast and non-broadcast television programming to access news, information and entertainment. The media are not common carriers of speech.

Communications Act Revisions: Selected Issues for Consideration

Noncommercial educational television stations and college newspapers are not included within the scope of the rules.

Newspaper

In July 1974, the Commission held three days of oral argument, at which all parties who requested time were allowed to speak.

FCC Releases New Media Ownership Rules

Media consolidation affects the way that the vast majority of people get their information, and the issue should be open to debate. But the Commission cannot agree that its inability to achieve perfection in every instance justifies maintaining the current system.

FCC Ordered to Rewrite Rules Easing TV Station Ownership

The Commission therefore continues to believe that broadcast ownership limits are necessary to preserve and promote viewpoint diversity.
