The court heard the two oldest children were placed together with an adoptive family in 2005. Oxytocin, acting on the limbic structures, is strongly implicated in neural mechanisms that are believed to underlie the formation and expression of attachment Bartz and Hollander 2006; Beech and Mitchell 2005. The number of regulated child care spaces has grown somewhat over the years, but access has remained substantially the same as it was when the Convention on the Rights of the Child was introduced, and research on quality shows that even regulated child care programs are more likely to be mediocre than excellent.

Where such children have experienced parental support, warmth, and positive socialization strategies, they show greater social competence, social maturity, school performance, and, importantly, significantly fewer behavior problems than do their less positively parented peers. In humans, this is evidenced in recent studies of adults showing that those who carry the low activity form of the MAO gene and who also have been reared in adverse environments are at significantly increased risk of aggression van Goozen et al.
