Prop 13 and the California Fiscal Crisis

Carter's positions were somewhere between Reagan's and Anderson's. Though caution and supervision should be exercised, the location of the staff office space near gallery areas, the practicality of having work done on the museum or its collection after hours and the desirability of permitting students, under supervision, to have such access to the museum indicate that an absolute prohibition on access is undesirable. But nonetheless, piling on new high-cost debt during a fiscal crisis may actually be worse than its alternatives.
