The Rise and Decline of Strategic Paralysis

He was unable to draw the Spartans into combat and so settled on freeing helots.

Liddell Hart A Study Of His Military Thought

INTRODUCTION BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY Basil Henry Liddell Hart was born on 31 October 1895 in Paris, the son of Rev H Bramley Hart and Clara Liddell Hart. Any future framework for operational adaptation must incorporate the effects of technological change, while avoiding the seductions of strategic paralysis theory.

But eighty is nothing for a student of history. Insofar as we describe the enemy as a system, while it may enhance our ability to cognitively embrace the situation, I don't believe it leads us to really understand the enemy. His frequently passionate advocacy of a position was based on both a solid knowledge of historical precedent and the practical realities and priorities of serving officers of the day both in Britain and elsewhere in Europe.
