Hochon's Arrow: The Social Imagination of Fourteenth

Neither traditional literary criticism nor traditional historiography, this book develops a highly effective position from which to consider medieval texts in relation to their moment.

Paul Strohm (Columbia): Auntenant Poet': Chaucer and the Streams of Strohm begins by inspecting legal records that accuse Hochon of Liverpool in 1384 of threatening to shoot an arrow at a political adversary urinating against a wall, and shows how the text embodies and interconnects language, social space, and historical interpretation itself. Within days, a repression set in, with guild masters submissively complying with a request to furnish names of their own members who took part in the disturbances Plea Rolls, mems.
