From hair and handwriting analysis to ink and DNA fingerprints, scientists have brought their world to bear on the justice system. The defendant in Spencer Virginia, 1989 was unable to mount an effective challenge to the admission of DNA evidence because he was denied two important resources: expert assistance and access to the testing records.

The problem is that the author inexplicably ignored the use of DNA evidence by the defense. Harris provides a unique contribution to the ongoing debates in the legal and scientific communities, as well as in the media and popular culture, concerning the shifting standards of reliability for science in law.
