Also in 699, Wu Zetian, realizing that she was growing old, feared that after her death, Li Xian and the Wu clan princes would not be able to have peace with each other, and she made him, Li Dan, Princess Taiping, Princess Taiping's second husband a nephew of hers , the Prince of Ding, and other Wu clan princes to swear an oath to each other. The year of birth deducted from the age at death and the age when she entered the palace, in the , compiled in 1065—84, is 624. She then had her youngest son Emperor Ruizong made emperor.

Wu Zetian

Un sourced material may be challenged and. This does not meet the traditional concept of a dynasty. She was more decisive and proactive than her husband, and she is considered by historians to have been the real for more than eighteen years and she supervised the court on a daily basis.

Wu Zetian

She had her niece poisoned, by placing poison in food offerings that Wu Weiliang and Wu Huaiyun had made and then blaming them for the death of the Lady of Wei. The rebellion initially drew much popular support in the region, however, Li Jingye progressed slowly in his attack and did not take advantage of that popular support. Such sexist opposition to her was only lifted during the late 1960s when 's wife rehabilitated Wu as part of a propaganda campaign to suggest she be considered as a successor to her ailing husband.
