It also assumes the unemployed here have the skills needed for those positions. Are they making us more competitive in the global marketplace, or less? As Micheline Maynard makes compellingly clear in this vivid account, global firms have rescued companies, restored jobs, and revitalized communities in the U. Today, when the business world has lost its borders and companies are no longer bound by the nations in which they were founded, no one nation—no matter how exceptional—can sustain itself through homegrown investment alone.

How China gets what it wants from American companies

Though in some parts of the country, the stigma of working for a foreign-owned company might still linger, Gary N.
