Introducing Messenger Kids, a New App For Families to Connect

Even though we want to improve our communication with our kids, be receptive to their level of interest in the conversation. When you show your kids that you accept and love them just the way they are despite their differences, they will be more likely to share their feelings and problems with you. One particular aspect to keep in mind for your situation is keeping your expectations realistic, as outlined in the article above.

Age

Expect names from their favorite cartoon or tv show characters or even their best friends. A library of kid-appropriate and specially chosen GIFs, frames, stickers, masks and drawing tools lets them decorate content and express their personalities.
