A further £728 £160,000 as of 2010 was immediately spent on lead for the roof.

Upnor Esquire Development

One branch went to Lower Upnor, and the other to the camp by Tower Hill. There was limited resistance from Chatham or the dockyard as the workers had not been paid for two years. The establishment of the Depôt was linked to the appointment in 1778 of an 'Inspector General and Superintendent of the Recruiting of all the Forces employed on foreign service', based in Chatham, who provided a degree of centralised oversight of responsibility for which had previously been left entirely to the regiments.
