Painting

Pigments used in paints are either natural, such as ochre, terre verte and ultramarine, animal and vegetable, such as rose madder, indigo, sap green, and gamboges, or artificial chemical compounds such as cobalt blue, or cadmium red. Knowing some fundamental painting techniques and styles will help you immensely when you're getting started on your artistic journey using paint.

Grove Encyclopedia of Materials and Techniques in Art

It is done by an individual or group. It produces a mat surface with fairly desaturated colors.

14 Acrylic Painting Techniques Used by the Masters

They are built of a narrow, pigmented core encased in a wooden cylindrical case. Sfumato: This form of painting is well regarded as the technique to soften transitions between colors, basically to mimic an area beyond what a human eye could perceive. It's impossible to work on top of heavy, wet paint.

OIL PAINTING

Although there is essential difference between Post Impressionism and Impressionist painters in concept, there is no fundamental difference in the materials and techniques, only with more emphasis on subjective color.
