Modern art in Japan is also represented with its unique tradition of papercutting. She finds her inspiration in the urbanized Tokyo. He was also a participating artist in the 1996 Asia Pacific Triennial at the Queensland Art Gallery which acquired his major work.

Kimio Tsuchiya Artist

He is a guest presenter in , a monthly video magazine, similar to Hot Version except regularly covers the D1GP and its sister video magazine which deals purely with drifting. To start with, although many contemporary Japanese artists have continued to follow traditions of the Japanese art, they have renewed it by the addition new styles, motifs, and techniques.

ヴァシヴィエールの月

Furthermore, modernist papercutting artworks of Nahoko Kojima are pretty fragile, because paper demands great attention and precise movements. Ten artworks were commissioned from leading Australian and international artists to form a circuit through the city from the Domain and Royal Botanic Gardens, through East Circular Quay and the city streets to Martin Place. The pieces, which used to be blessed with a life as a large leafy tree, were placed by him in a half-circle, and they began to dance the dance of death and life against the dark sky.

Kimio Tsuchiya (1990 edition)

A sheet of black paper was hand-cut by the artist and had frozen in the air resembling a sculpture of animal. He owned the aftermarket company until he sold the business in the end of 2005 to form. There are also artists who have neglected knowledge of the Japanese ancestors and began to use European oil paints and other tools attributable to the Western tradition.
