① Akiyama Saneyuki was a Meiji

In February 1899, due to the efforts of the Japanese ambassador, Akiyama received permission to serve a six-month tour on board a US Navy warship, the USS New York, where he was able to observe American tactics and fleet operations in the North Atlantic and Caribbean firsthand. Mahan was unwilling to help, aside from giving Akiyama a list of books to read.

However, the untimely death of his mother necessitated his replacement. Akiyama was born in Matsuyama Domain, Iyo Province, as a son of a poor samurai. Akiyama played a central role in the planning for the Battle of Port Arthur, the Battle of the Yellow Sea, the planning for the arrival of the Russian Baltic Fleet and its subsequent destruction in the Battle of Tsushima.

Chisho Akiyama Saneyuki : aru sennin sanbo no shogai / Oide Hisashi

Akiyama was 34 years old, and was lecturing to officers who were of the same age, or in some cases his senior. However, Akiyama was forced to abandon his study of letters as his elder brother Yoshifuru ordered him to go to Naval Academy in Tsukiji, Tokyo instead, largely due to the economically severe condition of the Akiyama family. The Japanese general Akiyama Yoshifuru was his elder brother and the Japanese politician Hisako Ōishi was his granddaughter.
