By creating an atmosphere of trust between parents and caregivers, and a sense of attachment and bonding with the baby, a partnership will be formed between parents and caregivers, which should result in the most appropriate recommendations and decisions for that particular family. At age 12, the child was brought to the clinic by her parents who described episodes of head nodding while eating during morning and evening meals when she appeared absent-minded, the head would fall forward progressively until striking the floor, whereupon the child would get up but, at times, fall to her knees.
