Evolution of the Atmosphere

It extends from the stratopause at an altitude of about 50 km 31 mi; 160,000 ft to the mesopause at 80—85 km 50—53 mi; 260,000—280,000 ft above sea level. Oxygen is the most important example of the latter type of substance that led to the term oxidation for the process of transferring electrons from reducing to oxidizing materials.

The truth about living climate

In addition to the establishment of the ideal gas mixture required for life on earth, the mechanisms needed to preserve and maintain this order are created alongside with it. The mesosphere is also the layer where most burn up upon atmospheric entrance.
