Girls in Haiti have reported having to go home to change the materials they use to manage their menstruation, resulting in lost instructional time HRW, 2016. Our challenge is to make them aware that they often behave differently towards boys and girls — perhaps without realising it — and reveal how this behaviour affects their students.

Eliminating Gender

A recent survey by Education International found that teacher codes of conduct were present in 26 of 50 countries surveyed EI, 2017. In a Michigan survey of 30 administrators and 247 faculty members from 30 preservice teacher education programs statewide, it was found that only 11% of respondents reported extensive gender equity instruction and 38% reported minimal to no gender equity instruction. They also need to incorporate other stakeholders to help build a more supportive environment.
