Further, is it not puzzling that Aslan equates illiteracy with scripture-lessness such that the verse may be used for that purpose? And he was motivated in his attack on the Ka'bah by a fury incited by a man from the Kinānī Arabs who provocatively soiled his cathedral. Abu-Ghazlah, AL Rubaiee Foundation, 2016.

Nevertheless, even the lighter cases of its embellishments result in unfortunate and unnecessary factual distortions. 'Umar al-Wāqidi, whose historical reports are considered highly suspicious by investigative hadith scholars who would view this narration, in its uncorroborated form, as unreliable at best and fabricated at worst.

Readers will be able to immediately appreciate the overall quality of the printing: the heavy paper, strong binding, professional typesetting, minimalist design, etc... Unlike some sirahbooks available in the market, which — despite some excellent content — are commonly discredited due to their poor grammatical constructions, imprecise translations, archaic prose, sophomoric transliteration, or simply the use of flimsy paper that allows text to bleed through to the other side, Revelation ensures that no reader will superficially dismiss it on the basis of appearance alone. I invite readers to thoroughly read themselves the chapters of the inception of Islam in Madīnah and the Emigration from the wide variety of available sirah books, especially those written from primary and early secondary sources, and then to formulate an informed opinion on the attitude of the people of Madīnah before and during the Hijrah. As a result, the reader is left with, besides al-Mubārakpūrī and Lings, an unhealthy reliance on extractions from a handful of controversial figures and questionable authorities like Montgomery Watt, Reza Aslan, and Karen Armstrong. The regular and uncritical extractions from Montgomery Watt, Karen Armstrong, Reza Aslan, Adil Salahi, and Martin Lings results in, among other things, an overall presentation of the prophetic biography with some fairly obvious cognitive biases: reductionism, presentism, chronological snobbery, etc... By reductionism, we are referring to the general unwillingness of some of the above authors to consider spiritual or religious factors in their historical explanations. Let not the Jews beat you to this good fortune and virtue.
