A variety of birds of rich plumage filled the air with their songs, and gold, silver, and precious stones were abundant.

Feathered Serpent, Dark Heart of Sky: Myths of Mexico by David Bowles

The Aztec believed that the cries and tears of newborn children were sacred to the god, and, therefore, many ceremonies for Tlaloc involved the sacrifice of children. The father then throws Sedna off the boat in the hopes that it will appease the birds and save his own life. In his left hand he held a shield painted red, having in the centre a white flower with four petals placed crosswise, and in his right hand he held a sceptre in the form of a cup.
