Basically, there are incremental requirements for island installation due to the fact that it does not make an assumption that the product is going to be fitted against a rear wall that acts to protect the back of the unit. The two guides Ivan and sorry can't remember the other name were excellent with a real passion for the site and their subject.

How wrong could I be - we were shown around by the very informative Brian and Ivan on a tour that ended up lasting over two hours as we found it so fascinating and asked so many questions. I would urge residents and visitors to pop in and take a nostalgic and educational look at the extensive display of original gas appliances. The site has been fully restored by Carrickfergus Gasworks Preservation Society and is now open as a visitor and educational attraction.
