The values Jesus proclaims in the story of the landowner hiring men to work in his vineyard contradict most cultural values about how we work. Below are some of the ways in which culture has impacts on cross-cultural leadership.

Quick Review: Leading Cross

. Many want covenant community and even more would say they really want to see fruit ministering cross-culturally, especially pragmatic evangelicals. Unfortunately ethnocentric people could read this and think they are getting the message of the book and not really get it.

Covenant Community, the Highest Priority The strawberry marketing case study described a situation where an expatriate saw an opportunity for local farmers with an excess of strawberries to market them in the city at a profit, thus improving their standard of living.

The Impact of Culture on Cross

People are emotional beings first and rational second. The hidden flaw in this project was a vision of a profit for local farmers, a vision for profit, instead of a vision to help local farmers realize their potential in Christ.
