For allow me to tell you that, since my arrival in the city, I have effected a reconciliation with my old friends—I mean my books; though the truth is that I had not abandoned their society because I had fallen out with them, but because I was half ashamed to look them in the face. Clearly Melville sympathized with Ahab's rebellion against an oppressive, crippling castrating? Also, as this was my first actual stint as a full Director, even with an excellent Assistant, it was necessary—and one must remember we each must start somewhere! This is similar to Hephaestus creating

Achilles' shield in Book XVII of the Iliad.
