Founded by traditional liberals such as and expressed by many other traditional liberals such as , , , , , and their intermediaries and a non-economist, but however, was highly influential, according to Foucault. It is in Foucault's analysis where he makes four important points on this governmental modern technology of biopolitics; an absolute correlative to the form of governmental technology which liberalism associated itself with, and it is pegged, tied to the specificity of economic process.

The Birth of Biopolitics (豆瓣)

The next general theme Foucault introduces is the German , the which produced general problems among themselves, namely the state apparatus and its reconstruction after the Second World War. The political regimes of truth political power upon every aspect of human social life , the battle between legitimacy, submitting to a fabricated division between true and false. Attended by thousands, they created benchmarks for contemporary critical inquiry.
