Knowledge Work and the skills gap in Manufacturing

Sales reps need continuous access to information in order to optimize their time. Save for robots and machinery, the shop floor is still run with pen and paper, and data is collected with stopwatches and clipboards. Second, as robots take over the factory line, workers are expected to perform high-skill tasks too complex for machines to execute, such as complex assemblies, management, and process improvements.

Knowledge Work and the skills gap in Manufacturing

Finally, future research should investigate other industries and other countries, to expand research and scholarship about flexible working into new sectors. What negative consequences did the leave absence give you? An inflection point in his writing came in 2007, soon after he gave a G. To be sure, many have been able to avoid hiring new workers — and some companies have reduced their reliance on outsourcing to complete administrative tasks.

Rethinking knowledge work: A strategic approach

After the twelfth interview, we heard repeated themes of work expanding into non-work time and efforts to juggle work and family. The readings in this volume come from a variety of sources not normally looked at by managers and business executives. As Davenport discovered, most knowledge-work companies have been more focussed on keeping up with technological breakthroughs that might open up new markets.

Rethinking knowledge work: A strategic approach

It laid the foundation for treating management as a subject that could be studied analytically.
