Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

Shall it never again beat high in the hearts of their sons? This was particularly the case at Kouen. He was in complete bustle ; till at length cr3dng, En route 1 he ascended the dizzy height, and we lumbered away in a cloud of dust. Anthony, to place a votive candle, and offer her prayer at the altar which stood in the little chapel dedicated to St.

A beautiful girl, with flaxen hair, blue eyes, and the form of a fairy in a midsummer night's dream, has just stepped out on the balcony beneath us 1 See how coquettishly she crosses her arms upon the balcony, thrusts her dainty little foot through the bars, and plays with her slip- per! Occasionally the sound of a guitar, or a distant voice, breaks in upon my reverie.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

The hostess of the Golden Lion received me with a curtsy and a smile, rang the house-bell for a servant, and told him to take the gentle- man's things to number thirty-five. It is like the nest of a ground-swallow, which the passing footstep almost treads upon, and yet it is not seen. With the living, and not with the dead I The right hand has lost its cur- ning in the grave ; but the soul, whose high voli- tions it obeyed, still lives to reproduce itself in ages yet to come.
