Depicting the eccentric physician who was attempting to treat the artist, this painting was viewed by van Gogh as a summation of his ideas about portraiture. Some of the factual errors were: 1 that Vincent attended school in his home town whereas he had been sent away to school, which he found very painful; 2 that he came from a wealthy family of art dealers, which ignored the fact that his family was poor and his rich art-business relatives refused to help him once he started to paint; that we worked in an exclusive art dealer business, never mentioning that he had been fired; and much more.
