Certainly, the angels will be in the Lake of Fire forever, because they are immortal beings.

Annihilation or Eternal Punishment? by Robert Peterson

Once again, let us allow Scripture to teach us rather than the prejudices of men: Hebrews 12:29 For our God is a consuming fire. They were both arguably MORE Platonist than Augustine to a fault, IMO! You have to read the whole scripture and interpret all of the words instead of just picking out phrases to justify commonly accepted ideas of Christianity.

The False Doctrine of Hell Exposed

The view that this is not the case, and that no one can resist the gentle pressure of the love of God for ever, is known as universalism.

The Origin of Hell

Why else teach the true evangel? What this tells us is that no one will ever be left in the state of being dead or nonexistent. The only view consistent with the first two convictions is that, in the end, one way or another, if not in this life then in the next, even the most obdurate sinners will be won over and made fit for heaven. Practically speaking, if you put some wood in some fire, what will happen? Many Christians abstain for the purpose of future reward, and in doing so, look into the world and see the glamour but not the pain.
