Consciousness Is the Whole Brain. It's Not Reducible.

After half an hour, the passage will be closed and the challenge will officially begin! I drag the silence of the evening, a gray road winding from the fields to a bridge with willow trees hanging over and ending in the palm of a young boy. If such a reading is taken, the poem begins with a statement of the male persona's longing for an ideal beloved in the first stanza, depicts the withholding of fulfillment in the second, and concludes with an eventual realization of these desires in the third stanza.
