Islam in the Twenty

Women are increasingly present in highly visible positions of religious prominence, although, to date, few have significant positions in the religious establishment and none have achieved the highest positions, such as grand mufti or ayatollah. Some of the common internal challenges faced by the Muslim World are given below.

Islam in the Twenty

The Institute also organises seminars, conferences and workshops to achieve and promote its objectives.

Focus On...

Consciously and less than consciously people have made of the religion they inherited what they will, and with that change has come ideological and sometimes violent conflict. This is a dangerous trend that needs discipline: use it at a certain time! And these have various, different appeals and benefits, things that it can offer to the world.

Who would get the tax from this fantastic trade, which was going through the Silk Route? We see this on this growing global scale. I think that, first of all, obviously, I am certainly not an expert in the situation of the Orthodox church here in Russia, but from what people tell me, it is struggling in terms of getting the interest of young people. And I think this is one of the main factors that influences the thinking in the Islamic world: they want to be respected for what they are, and accepted for what they are, and included as a major civilization of the world and a major religious group of the world, which they are.
