Spectrophotoelectric sensitivity of thalofide (1920 edition)

All of Fox's sound feature films were made using the Movietone system until 1931 when it was superseded by a recording system using the light-valve invented by Edward C.

Reduced sensitivity of SARS

By means of screens of mica, and of glass, successive portions of the ultra-violet spectrum are eliminated and the effects upon the resulting germicidal action established. After the split with de Forest, Case adopted a revised position for the projector soundhead, which was now placed below the picture head, with a sound-picture offset of 14 1/2 inches 368 mm which is close to the present day standard, rather than being placed above the picture head as had been the phonofilm practice.
