Small Places, Large Issues: An Introduction to Social and Cultural Anthropology (Fourth Edition) on JSTOR

George Herbert Mead The classification of humanity into races, based on physical appearance, is arbitrary and scientifically uninteresting. It developed as an academic discipline during the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, but it has important forerunners in the historiography, geography, travel writing, philosophy and jurisprudence of earlier times. Behaviour refers to observable events involving humans or animals, whereas action or agency, the way the concept is used here, implies that actors can reflect on what they do.

Why are human life stages so often characterised by rituals, and what do these rituals reveal about understandings of life, adulthood and death? The book explores the concept of gift giving as one that has the motives of power and authority. There are many ways of writing the history of anthropology, just as there may exist, in any given society, competing versions of national history or origin myths, promoted by groups or individuals with diverging interests. Examines the role of gender, race, sex, money, conflict, and the construction of place and time in a virtual world.
