Detection of Hemoglobin (Hb) Variants By HPLC Screening in Cord Blood Units (CBU) Donated to the National Cord Blood Program (NCBP)

Pipette 2 ml of reagent into three 12 × 75 mm test tubes. Vaso-occlusion with ischemia—reperfusion injury is the central event, but the underlying pathophysiology is complex, involving a number of factors including hemolysis-associated reduction in nitric oxide bioavailability, chronic inflammation, oxidative stress, altered red cell adhesive properties, activated white blood cells and platelets and increased viscosity. Dehydration removes the water from RBCs, bringing HbS molecules even closer to each other, thus greatly facilitating sickling.

HPLC is a simple to perform, accurate, comprehensive, inexpensive and fast screening method for HP in cord blood. Moreover, the light-matter interaction due to SP causes a strongly localized exponentially deteriorating evanescent wave across the metal interface. HbS tends to be common among ethnic groups that have traditionally had high exposure to Plasmodium falciparum malaria.
