Three Wishes For Jamie

Starting her professional career when a teenager, Miss Jeffreys was a leading junior model for John Robert Powers in New York, while studying for an operatic career. Jamie asks her if she liked it and Claire's face drops.

She tells Ned the dress was from a lord, a regular customer who had bought the dress in London for his lady, but when he found himself broke from gambling at the tables in Stirling, he traded the dress for her. In flashback, Murtagh and the landlady shake their heads as they try to rouse a hung-over Claire. He says they haven't met Claire Beauchamp, but he'll be happy to introduce her to them as Mrs.

Three Wishes for Jamie

Claire looks in horror at her disheveled reflection. He tells her that he finds her a remarkable woman offers her further pleasures.

Three Wishes for Jamie CD (2006)

At the time of the original run, and the release of the album in 1952, the show seemed too much like Brigadoon and Finian's Rainbow for its own good -- with the distance of time, the amiable score and Raitt's vocal charms and those of Anne Jeffreys et al more than justify owning the CD. The show finally opened in New York on March 21, 1952-- six months after it had been expected.

Three Wishes for Jamie

Jamie says he'll only wed once, and he'll do it in a way that would have made his mother proud. He caresses her and even though she responds to him, she deflects and asks about the new kilt he wore for the wedding. She says she's Claire Elizabeth Beauchamp and holds out her hand to shake.

Three Wishes for Jamie

Claire wishes him a good evening and takes her leave, but before she goes she sincerely thanks him for his kindness and says the ring is wonderful. Jamie says still waters run deep.
