Canada must assert sovereignty over the Arctic while there's still time

In the 14th Century, the kingdoms of Denmark, Norway and Sweden were joined in the Kalmar Union under the rule of the Danish Queen Margareta. He promoted it and remained the central figure in it until its disastrous end.

Canadian Sovereignty in the Arctic: The Expedition of 1903

Like continental Denmark and Finland, Sweden does not have an Arctic coastline but it is a nation closely tied to the sea by its geographic connection to the Gulf of Bothnia, the Baltic Sea and the Atlantic Ocean and would benefit from access to trade routes in the Arctic Ocean. However, these and similarly symbolic acts of raising flags and erecting plaques carried little weight in since they were not accompanied by effective occupation or administration.
