Alighieri, Dante (1265

Regret releases sighs when she takes pride and rancor by surprise. And if anyone had wished to know Love, he might have done so by looking at my glistening eyes. Make it so that your words are a kind of intermediary, so that you do not speak to her directly, which would not be proper.

La Vita Nuova

Love marshals then against me all his might; Routed, my spirits wander, murmuring, And to my lady bring Petition for new solace in my plight. Perhaps a still subtler person would see a subtler reason in this, but this is the one that I see and that I like the most. The thirty-one poems in the first of his major writings are linked by a lyrical prose narrative celebrating and debating the subject of love.

La Vita Nuova

Then I felt relieved, confident my secret had not been betrayed that day by my appearance.

Vita Nuova by Dante Alighieri

Dante writes this story following his meeting with Beatrice, with whom he falls head over heels in love. Suddenly he realises that his gaze has been interpreted by those who have seen him as directed to another lady was sitting along his line of sight.

Dante's New Love Life: the Vita Nuova

What remains unclear is whether Beatrice was actually a woman in the flesh or not.

Vita Nuova by Dante Alighieri

Rossetti himself—an accomplished poet fluent in the Italian of his scholar-father Gabriele, who had edited the Commedia—could not reproduce in clear English the strange poems of the Vita Nuova. Only once does she greet him and sometimes she appears in dreams.
