With this opinion I do not agree, for the following reasons:— First, if we can judge from the anatomy of the bird, from the shape of its beak, the form of its claws, and its general structure, we can come to no other conclusion than that it was not a bird of prey or flesh-eater. Nelson Association for the Promotion of Science and Industry. But the pigeon flew away to another tree when he came near, and so on, till, by the voice and appearance, he had recognised his father and then flew and perched upon the pole-like tool ko with which his father was turning up the ground, and cooed to him.
