Past, Present and Future of POP1

Law enforcement interest in using geographical information systems GIS to map the incidence of crime occurred in parallel to research activities that identified patterns in crimes and criminal behaviour in the emerging field of environmental criminology see, among others, Brantingham and Brantingham 1981; Bottoms and Wiles 1992; Rengert 1992; Bottoms and Wiles 2002.

Community Policing

Also between 2001 and 2007, an estimated 30,348,938 people Traffic harm reduction research Most studies that examine the police effect on traffic-related harms have been conducted outside the United States. It gives the police a strong capacity to inform the situation through the collection and analysis of relevant carefully gathered data.

Not by accident: An analytical approach to traffic crash harm reduction

Relationships between officers Complications can arise if police managers are unschooled in proper implementation of POP strategies.
