Primary Care Supports for Children with Chronic Health Conditions: Identifying and Predicting Unmet Family Needs

With adequate professional and informal community supports, families may be able to access more resources and function more effectively, thereby promoting health in the child and reducing overall family needs. For this reason, we removed the social support items from the FNS and conducted the hierarchical regression analysis again with this modified criterion variable. Written by nurse practitioners for nurse practitioners, this one-of-a-kind resource provides the expert guidance you need to provide comprehensive primary care to children with special needs and their families.

Primary Care of the Child with a Chronic Condition

Part II identifies specific chronic conditions and the alterations in standard primary care practices needed to promote optimum health.

Primary Care of the Child With a Chronic Condition

These appraisals may be associated with maternal depression, which was not measured in this study but is known to increase the risk of ineffective parenting ;. Child functioning variables, entered in the second step, did not add significantly to the prediction of unmet family needs. As shown in , demographic variables together accounted for a small but significant percentage of variance in unmet family needs in the first step, although none of the individual demographic variables was a unique predictor of total family needs.

Primary Care of the Child With a Chronic Condition E

Ninety-four percent of the children lived with at least one biological or adoptive parent, and the remainder lived with other family members or foster parents. The least frequent needs were for legal assistance, transportation, and vocational activities for older children, which may be related to the fact that this study examined a middle-class sample of young children. It is possible that mothers' difficulty obtaining and coordinating resources to meet their child's needs may cause them to feel overwhelmed and burdened.
