Oxford University Press - Mataloona and Mizh

pashtunology The Pashtun must follow a strong code of honor, that is, family and traditions. (Pashto or Pukhto (the same word as the language), also known as Pashtunwali, is a traditional code embodying Pashtun understandings of "honour", and covers every aspect of personal, family and tribal life. To keep the code is called "doing Pashto". Pashtunwali/Pashto may best be viewed as a composite notion that embraces the customs and behaviour, morality, ethos, and notion of ancestral heritage associated with "being Pashtun".

This proverb asserts that honour and Pashtunwali are bound up with the very essence of "Pashtunness" and Pashtun identity, without the spirit of Pashto, one might as well be "swallowed up by the earth", i.e. dead.
