Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County. They live in and across the world, including pools in , in ice-covered mountain lakes and in. The body is 3 mm 0.

branchiopods

They are ubiquitous in inland aquatic habitats, but rare in the oceans. Branchiopods are a heterogeneous group linked by similar mouthparts and leaf-like thoracic legs phyllopods. AB - This chapter focuses on the class Branchiopoda, which includes the common Daphnia, and other members of the suborder Cladocera order Diplostraca.

ADW: Branchiopoda: CLASSIFICATION

Scientists estimate that the United States and Canada contain? If the habitat that these silica fossils were formed in was indeed a hot spring, it is not surprising that Lepidocaris rhyniensis is the only animal that is abundant in the deposit. Fossils from this deposit are found in chips and nodules of silica thought to have precipitated from a silica saturated hot spring or geyser pool.
