Ayatullah Khumayni argued that the right to rule devolves from the imams to the jurists, during the occultation ghayba of the twelfth imam, because they are best qualified to know the divine revelation and the shari'a; and this right would devolve to a single jurist faqih if he succeeds to establish a government. Mu'awiya was speedily recognised as the new caliph, and he was to found the first dynasty in Islam, the Umayyads, who stayed in power for nearly a century. In its new sense, mawla meant a Muslim of non-Arab origin attached as a client to an Arab tribe, because, on embracing Islam, non-Arabs were expected to become affiliated as clients to Arab tribes.
