So, as a Member who has been without an electoral contest for so many years, I am sure the House will agree that I am entitled to feel somewhat apprehensive lest we should be doing away altogether with the provisions of the. Gentleman smiles, but I understand that that is so, and that he and others have agreed that there should be no General Election until after the cessation of hostilities or three years thereafter.

The Integrity Commission Act

I know it is realised by the members of His Majesty's Government, but I hope that they will treat this matter as urgently as any war matter during a war. At any rate, there seems to be a fundamental incongruity in these con- ceptions to which the attention of the Socialist intelligentsia should speedily be directed. It is a simple thing to do.

DANVERS, Joseph (1686

The first of all is inflation. . Now for the first time these high-quality digital copies of original 18th century manuscripts are available in print, making them highly accessible to libraries, undergraduate students, and independent scholars.

WILLIAMS (afterwards WILLIAMS WYNN), Watkin (?1693

But I did not rise to make that point primarily but because I was glad to follow one of the few remaining hon. What I am hoping for, what I am longing for, is that the political thought and the political science of this world will at last begin to keep pace with the tremendous movement forward of mechanical invention.

Seale, Colonel Wood, Alderman Sharpe, General TELLERS. No man has greater right or cause than he to make a speech regarding a Measure such as this.

DANVERS, Joseph (1686

We also intend to deal with the problem of compensation and betterment, the solution of which is essential for the proper planning of the countryside and the full utilisation of the land in the interests of the people.

STEELE, Richard (1672

It is in the heavy industries, too, that the toll of industrial disease and industrial injury is the greatest. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to approach all their proposals in that spirit, not in a spirit of the ideology of the one side or the other.
