Conclusion Through this overview of the various steles and memorials, we can see that the San-chieh-chiao was not solely a movement of the masses, as their stress on mo-fa has led some scholars to conclude.

and the of in China

At the same time, however, the imperial court and Mei Wen-ting prepared preliminary accounts stressing the native Chinese origins chung-yuan of Western natural studies. This longstanding perspective has been challenged by recent studies that indicate that mathematics and calendar reform were important concerns among Ming literati before the arrival of the Jesuits in China. The Chiang-nan Arsenal and Fu-chou Shipyards, for instance, were acknowledged by Europeans and Japanese to be more advanced than their competitor in Meiji Japan, the Yokosuka Dockyard, until the 1880s.
