La femme de l'ombre

The question of taste or judgement in art is also an important theme, as exemplified by Swann's exquisite taste in art, which is often hidden from his friends who do not share it or subordinated to his love interests.

Un géant de l'ombre tire sa révérence

The Narrator longs for the country girls he sees alongside the roads, and has a strange feeling—possibly memory, possibly something else—while admiring a row of three trees.

He develops a love of the theater, especially the actress Berma, and his awkward Jewish friend Bloch introduces him to the works of the writer Bergotte.

ESS est à maturité, je laisse un bébé en pleine forme à Rémy.

In Search of Lost Time

The Narrator pieces together that Saint-Loup had visited Jupien's brothel, and ponders what might have been had he lived. At one of their parties he meets and befriends Bergotte, who gives his impressions of society figures and artists. Mais je veux parler de la forme.
