Blue Thunder: The Truth About Conservatives from Macdonald to Harper

Plamondon presents the Reform-Alliance movement and its leaders Preston Manning, Stockwell Day and then, briefly, Stephen Harper in a more negative light than it deserves, almost as if it were less important than the PC party during the elections in which both parties competed. To sustain his government, Harper warmed to climate change and overcame his distaste of regional development programs.

The First Gay Prime Minister in the Empire

Harper sought the conservative party leadership from a strong base in Western Canada and healthy respect in rural Ontario; but he was weak in Québec, Atlantic Canada, and large urban centres.

Sir John A. Macdonald

He gave us a robust central government while affording provinces sufficient power to sustain local practices and cultures. While it deals with Canada's history since 1867, a relatively short historical period of only 142 years, it has to be brief on any topic or period.

Blue Thunder: The Truth about Conservatives from Macdonald to Harper

In the midst of a worldwide recession the Reform party hived off the western faction, while the Bloc Québécois took hold in la belle province. Fewer still have enviable election records.
