Presence of heterocyclic amine carcinogens in home

Exposure may also result from occupational inhalation. Heterocyclic amine content in beef cooked by different methods to varying degrees of doneness and gravy made from meat drippings. These results indicate that both human and rat liver microsomes catalyze the glucuronidation of several N-OH heterocyclic amines and, in the case of N-OH-PhIP, two microsomal N-glucuronide metabolites were formed with distinct chemical and enzymatic properties.

The data obtained from the cooked camel meat burgers could be applied to measure HCA exposure, especially in the Saudi Arabian population, and could be used in epidemiology studies. In addition, a large proportion of Chinese in Singapore are Buddhists or Taoists, and strict adherents may choose to abstain from beef as part of their religious practice.
